“Mini-grants are provided by the Division of Research in support of special short-term needs of faculty in association with the initiation of research and scholarly projects. Up to $1,000 will be provided for supplies, temporary service, minor equipment needs, conference support, and other similar expenditures. Funding will be provided only for specific items relevant to a well-defined short-term need (up to one year); funding for incremental support and long-term programmatic growth is not appropriate. Seed support will be provided for conferences being held on campus; support for faculty travel to conferences elsewhere should not be requested.

The mini-grants program is not intended to compensate for cuts in ongoing grants or departmental shortfalls. It should be viewed as a mechanism to take advantage of special opportunities or to react to unexpected situations. Mini-grant funding will not be provided as an add-on to on-going research. They will also not be provided to cover publication costs, computer equipment or software.

In order to remove the need to “knock on every door,” matching funds from other units are not required; where other sources of funding are being provided, however, that information should be provided.

Applicants must provide a brief summary of the project on the mini-grant report form. Describe the need for funds, including specific budgetary items, in sufficient detail to permit evaluation by someone not familiar with your discipline, indicate how support will enhance the quality of the research effort involved and how this funding may lead to eternally funded activity. Your response should not exceed 250 words.

Recipients of the mini-grant support are required to submit a final report on what was accomplished as a consequence of funding within 90 days, after the completion of the project. Failure to submit these reports will exclude that unit from further mini-grant support. Mini-grants are subject to all applicable research compliance requirements.

Submit an application form with the endorsement from the appropriate Department Chair or Dean, Sponsored Funds Administration, Attn: Jennifer Metcalf. Additional copies are not required. Requests for mini-grants will be accepted at any time and will be reviewed approximately monthly.
